Dear Sir,

At the last Congress of Orientalists held at Athens, 1912, you were appointed member of a standing Committee, which was appointed inter alia ~~and~~ to act upon any invitations which might be received for the next meeting of the Congress.

I have to-day received the letter of which I enclose you a copy. The members of the standing Committee were authorised to express their views on such invitations by letter to the Honorary Secretary, who was to communicate the result to the parties concerned.

As the time left for organization is short, I shall be obliged if you will be so good as to inform me, at your earliest convenience, whether this invitation from Oxford should or should not, in your opinion, be accepted.

I am,

Yours very faithfully,

T. W. Rhys Davids

Honorary Secretary to the standing
Committee of the International
Congress of Orientalists.
