Nov. 21. 1906

Dear Sir,

I showed your letter to Professor M. yesterday: and he informed me that, though efforts had been made to identify the house referred to by Clarke as having been Uri's dwelling, no success had met the attempt: probably the window has long been broken and replaced by another.

The house where we are at present is very comfortable: and I find Miss Payne Smith's library most useful.

My really intense work cannot begin until lectures cease, as they occupy so much of my time. When term is over I hope to spend 3 or 4 whole days every week in the Bodleian & hope my work there will prove of some use and value to others.

The weather here is dreadful: it rains every day, and the mud is appalling.

Unless I get another six months' leave from the various institutes, I hope (D.V.) to be back in Budapest about the beginning of March: then we can talk over the translation of your work.

With kind regards

I remain

Yours sincerely

Arthur D. Yolland
