My dear Mr. Lukacs:

As a long-standing admirer of your work I would like very much to get you to do an occasional article for ^{The} Nation. Would you be interested?

Do you have anything at hand that you could send us or any suggestions for possible articles?

Best wishes,

Carey McWilliams

My dear Mr. Lukacs:

Many thanks for your letter. I do trust that very soon now we will see that piece you promised to do for The Nation. I am extremely anxious to enroll you as a contributor, the more so as at the moment I am reading with great relish your study of the historical novel.

Best wishes,

Dear Mr. Lukacs:

I continue to live in hopes that you will do an article for us one of these days. How about it?

Best wishes,

Dear Mr. Lukacs:

You will recall that I have written you before inquiring about articles. I notice from Newsweek of April 6 a reference to an interview with you which appeared recently in New Literature. And I notice from the same story that you talked with a representative of Newsweek.

Is it at all possible that you might do an article for us based upon what you said in these two interviews, or at least touching on the same themes?

Best wishes,

Dear Mr. Lukacs:

Perhaps you will recall that I have had occasion to write you on several occasions in the past, first of all to express my great admiration for your work and second to try to induce you to do an occasional piece for The Nation.

In any case I plan to be in Budapest July 19 to 24 at the Gellert Hotel. If you are going to be in the city at that time, I would like very much to have a chat with you. Among other things I am most anxious to get your advice and suggestions about furthering the kind of East-West dialogue that The Nation has tried (not too successfully) to establish.

Would such a meeting be possible?

Best wishes,

Carey McWilliams
