Dear Mr. George Lukács:

I have used a passage of your writings in my CRITIC'S NOTEBOOK, Univ. of Minnesota Press and in England Oxford Univ. Pr., 1950, and only now on spotting the ad about your new book have I known of an address to reach you—I need your kind permission to reprint, and would appreciate your granting it very much. Book is now in galley, and so I'd like early reply; permission request is for world publication rights & sale in English language. Passage is from INTERNATIONAL LITERATURE, 8 (August 1936), 58: "The Intellectual Physiognomy of Literary Characters." WORDAGE about 500, or less.

"The persons of reality...individuality." "Plot.....increases it."

Best wishes for the success of your book, STUDIES IN REALISM; is it being published in this country? I wish I had known about it sooner in order to have perhaps drawn from it in this collection of quotations from contemporary critics. Is the above essay reprinted in this book?

Sincerely yours,

R. W. Stallman
