

VIII, József-Könyt, 56
Tel. em 23 ajtó

17.3
Kedapest, Hungary,
5th December, 1896

My dear Mrs. Goldziker,

It must have annoyed and vexed you very much that I did not come to the pretty little spread you had prepared for me, and in my honor. I beg you to pardon me. I can only say I have been quite sufficiently punished. Both Wednesday and Thursday evenings I had to keep to my room with cold in the head from last Sunday's exposure in accepting so many invitations, and with resultant legislative complications. And I was mentally unhappy at having to offend, not only my friends at Kolozsvár to whom I had to telegraph and break my promise to them, but also my kind-hearted professor and his wife. And to boot, no letter had come from America all the week to break the suspense I was being kept in, as Professor Goldziher will know.

Next time I shall surely behave better; I am now impatient until Kisohy tells me from you that you forgive me this time as you would one of your own boys.

Please accept my heartiest good wishes for a happy stay in Vienna and for your safe return to Budapest, when the new must always feel "uncomfortable," if they are gentlemen, when the lady of the house is absent.

Respectfully,
Frank B. Rowley