Dear Goldzyher

Thank you very much for your reference to your review of Brochelmans. I have found several things in it.

I am a good deal puzzled by As-Saymarī's kind of literature, especially as to where Muslims drew the line, what they recorded as qabīḥ and what not.

I have two books on ḥimāyat by Jurjānī
(d. 482) and by Tha'ālībī (d. 430) which are as strong in that way as anything I have seen. They were printed together at Cairo 1326. But the same thing is always coming out. What was their standard of taste?

Faithfully,

D. B. Macdonald
