Dear Colleague.

I have sent to you, under a separate cover (registered), a letter of good wishes for your 70th birthday from some of your English friends, and I shall be glad to hear from you of its safe arrival. Doubtless, many others of your friends in this country would have liked to add their names to this letter, but I am only acquainted with the Arabists. Professor Burkitt would (I am sure) have been glad to sign it, but he was away from Cambridge when I was there. W. Stanley Cook, your collaborator in the last edition of Robertson Smith's "Kinship and Marriage in Early Arabia" would have signed, but he felt that the language implied a greater intimacy with you than he had had opportunity of enjoying.

I wish that it were possible to do something to help you in your difficulties, effectively. If I can in any way be of assistance to you, please command me.

My wife joins me in kind remembrances to yourself and Madame Goldzyher.

Yours very sincerely
T. W. Arnold.
