

It's a false summer's day
The Curfew toll the knell of parting day

All the air a solemn stillness holds,
 Save where the beetle wing with drowsy flight
 And the mooping owl does complain to the moon.
 Of such a wondering mass to be seen below Whosest her annals solitary reign -

Beneath those wedged slabs - ~
Where heavy the turf in many a mouldering heap Each in his narrow cell for ever laid The wide forefathers of the hamlet sleep.
No more shall ⁺the clasp of the cock, nor the echoing horn - rouse them from their lonely bed - Nor wail the blaze of burning heath, Nor the children's lips that cry "remember!" and climb the knees of fathers show the curv'd legs.

Here proud of heraldry, and all the path of glory laid out here - Here neigh ~~also for~~^{his} in for these after too long celestial fire burst - some glorious Milton lay - Dr. Cornwall gave from his Country blood - They were circumfired by their loss, and they're come escaped - They too forced to run through slaughter to the throne -

Yet how full many a gem with purest ray serene Vexes the unfathom'd Ocean's ^{deep} ~~wide~~ full many a flower is born to blush unseen, and ~~waits its~~ sweetness on the desert air - But who so durn forgetfulness or prey,
Can let the warm precincts of the sun Wolvent a long and lingering look?
